

Int'l Organizations Law (FRANCESCA DE VITTOR)

International trade, foreign investments, human rights, environment, development, international security, use of the sea and of the air... All international activities are today the object of regulations in the framework of international institutions. United Nations, European Union, World Trade Organization or International Monetary Fund are just a few of the best known among the dozens of international organizations involving States. Any international affair will necessarily lead the person engaged to interact with international organizations at various levels. The aim of the course is to provide students with the body of knowledge needed to manage this relationship and make the most of the tools that international organizations offer
